GRAY HAIRS

Barly in youth's unclouded spring In life's serenest morn. I saw a white hair glistening Like dew drop on the thorn,

With fluttering heart I quickly tore The intruder from its cell ; The silver filament curled o'er. And trembled as it fell.

I asked myself why it was there? And deemed that it must b The ghost of a departed hair Which Nellie stole from me.

Another came-companionless A little while it grew ; And then, to share its loneliness. Another paled its hue.

Yes! I remember well the fears When first ve spread my brow Gray monitors of fleeting years, Ye cluster thickly now!

I plucked ye once when ye were few, When sparsely gathered there, And thought that I had conquered you-Companions of my care,

I hail ye heralds of the tomb, No longer ye annoy ; I hail ye in your sickly bloom, As harbingers of joy.

I learn a lesson in each tress That withers slowly here, And mingle hopes of happiness With each intruding fear.

Yes, snowy wreath ; yes, whitened cloud ; Pale emblems of life's even. Ye're preludes to that purer shroud, The unsullied robe of Heaven.
